In German and Austrian ethnology, the idea of Southeast Asia as an area characterised by a striking quantity of socio-cultural commonalities dates back to the early years of the 20th century. At the same time, the imagination of other European and American scholars was captured by the overseas dependencies of their respective states.

Niels Mulder

Reviewed publication:

SUBSEQUENT to the Japanese overwhelming the area in 1942, the Allies established the South-East Asia Command to re-conquer it and ever since Southeast Asia as a particular entity was on the map. As a scholarly invention, it was inaugurated at the time of the war in Vietnam when the focus on ethnic-specific colonies became henceforth concentrated in Departments and Institutes of Southeast Asian Studies. Even so, and well into the 1970s, the comparative study of subjects within the Region developed at a slow pace.

As no serious student can break free from the area's baffling diversity, the debate on whether it is more than an accident of geography is with us up to this date. Simultaneously, the works of scholars like Van Leur, Benda, Wertheim, Wolters, Lombard, McVay, Anderson, Evers, Reid, Mulder, King, and Scott, among others, stand out in developing the unity of the various low-land populations of the Region. Among them, Anthony Reid stands out as the prolific, imaginative, and versatile historian.

Whereas the debate on Southeast Asia as a meaningful unit of scholarly investigation will be with us for a long time to come, Reid must be credited with having established the historical reality of pre-colonial Southeast Asia. To succeed in doing this, his persistent focus has been on the 'unmediated' realities of existence in the area and on the experiences and ideas of individual Southeast Asians. Through concentrating on these, he developed Southeast Asian commonalities and points of view that inform the present.

Concurrent with Lombard, Reid identified the pre-colonial Southeast Asian world as an 'Asian Mediterranean' in which the sea both united and divided, and that was richly endowed with commercial, cultural and social interaction. To Reid, Southeast Asia's characteristic diversity was a virtue rather than an obstacle to see the Region as a valid unit of analysis, while giving hope that cultural diversity can coexist with 'globalisation'.

Through persistently pursuing the autonomous approach to Southeast Asian history, the outsiders' gaze on the area's 'Indianisation', 'Sinicisation', 'Islamisation' and 'Westernisation' could be relegated to the wings where it belongs. This latter view of the dominance of outside influences led to gross overstatements and the idea of cultural imitation, and was not helpful to recognise the grafting of external elements on the cultural body of Southeast Asians in their diversity. It was the local genius that captured and domesticated the inputs while shaping them to its own image; it is this own-ness that abundantly dominates. It is Filipino religiosity in Catholic symbols; it is Thai supernaturalism shaping Buddhism; it is Japanese pantheism that enlivens its Islam, etc.

Next to the pragmatic openness to foreign ideas and their localisation, the comparatively favourable position of women in the Region is a persistent theme in Reid's work, even as current technological modernisation imposes restrictions on lower-class women's autonomy.

A third major proposition is the recognition that Southeast Asians have been managing their affairs independent of powerful states and the cultural uniformity imposed by centrist nationalisms. It is these important elements that point to the Region's home-grown potential for generating creative solutions and that give Southeast Asia a special place in global history.

Naturally, Reid's academic excellence prompted in many of us the feeling of being under a –decidedly Southeast Asian– debt of gratitude for raising our awareness and stimulating our thinking. Consequently, as he approached his 'seventy seventies', the idea was born to celebrate his sterling achievement with a Festschrift containing fifteen highly readable yet very diverse contributions to the broad field of Southeast Asian Studies.

As may be expected, the first two chapters focus on his life (Wade and Li), and on his scholarship (Cribb). Under “Southeast Asia in the world”, we find Lieberman’s fascinating historical parallels among the Eurasian rim lands, viz. France, Russia, Japan, and the Southeast Asian polities. Subsequently, Wang Gungwu adjusts the Mediterranean metaphor to the area as a ‘two-ocean Mediterranean’, which is the right place to introduce Lombard’s vision of ‘Space and Time’ in the archipelagic part of the Region. Following this, Ani Kumar wants to confine herself to its ‘Indonesian’ sea-farers and their ‘Maritime Reach’.

The Part on “Early Modern Southeast Asia” brings together “Southeast Asian Islam and Southern Chinese (Wade), the end result is a welcome enrichment of all the disciplines mentioned.

Reviewed publication:

This book, started in 2002 as a PhD thesis at Leiden University, has grown into a voluminous treasure of field data covering history, mythology, ritual geography, caste and religion, guth organisation and eco-society – all treated in an anthropological framework. It is this holistic approach (reflecting the best traditions of the Leiden school of cultural anthropology) that determines the book’s value, and reference to it should henceforth not be lacking in any serious publication, in whatever discipline, on Newar culture.

The core of this study, linking history, mythology, ritual, and social system – and justifying its title – consists of detailed descriptions of two cults: the local Buddhist cult of Vajra Yogini (the goddess residing in the forest temple above Sankhu, believed to be the creator of the kingdom and first king of Sankhu), and the Svasthavihari cult originating in Sankhu of which David Collier, in the Foreword of the book, mentions the fasting practice (rote) “has spread out, not just to other Newar settlements, but (...) to the whole of the Nepali speaking world today” – today this includes Nepalis settled in the USA, UK and the FarEast. Local and global, inside and outside, close distances and Buddhist and Hindu, Tantric, syncretist Newar and classical Veda, caste based discrimination and modern democracy contained in the field of study represent oppositions, dilemmas, contradictions, complementarities, dynamic interactions in various respects, presented from different angles. As an inhabitant of Sankhu the author, by experience, has internalized these dynamics himself. Therefore he was well placed to collect inside information from many sources.

In the light of tradition and modernity, there are increasing measure threats to the socio-ritual fabric that defines Sankhu as a town and as a ‘ritual kingdom’, both from outside as well as from inside – and this is the case with most Newar towns.

Monograph of a Nepalese town

This monograph of a Nepalese town or ‘ritual kingdom’ in the Valley of Kathmandu, covers sixteen centuries – from the 6th century when the Mahayana Gom-vihara in the forest above Sankhu was first mentioned in an inscription, till present-day Sankhu as it appears from a socio-economic survey executed by the author himself. Shrestha has spared neither time nor effort to relate his own meticulously collected fieldwork data to all which is known from archeological, historical, anthropological and religious studies on the religion and culture of the Newar. The end result is a welcome enrichment of all the disciplines mentioned.

Sjoerd Zaanen
Graduate Opportunities in Brunei

The Academy of Brunei Studies
Universiti Brunei Darussalam

The Academy of Brunei Studies is Brunei’s main centre for humanities and social science research relating to Brunei and neighbouring regions of Borneo. Graduate studies are an important component of this research and there are currently forty local and international students at the Academy studying for MA by Research and Doctor of Philosophy degrees. The Academy is currently expanding its graduate programme and particularly encourages applicants in the following fields:

- Development and Social Issues in Brunei; Brunei International Relations; Brunei History (pre-modern to modern); Ethnohistory; Brunei Socioeconomics; The National Concept of Malay Islamic Monarchy; Brunei Customs and Traditions; Brunei Material Culture; Brunei Literature; Islamic Law and Governance; Administration of Islamic family law in Brunei; Ethnicity in Brunei; Fishing and fisheries in Brunei (traditional and modern); Peace and Conflict Studies; Deviance and Crime; Migrant Workers in Brunei; Gender and society

Note: Comparative and multi-country studies that include Brunei are accepted in all fields

Scholarships
A limited number of scholarships are available to outstanding candidates
- Universiti Brunei Darussalam Graduate Research Scholarships for PhD study
  Benefits: A monthly allowance of $1,500 (maximum of 3 years), return passage to Brunei from and back to home country, a one-time payment of $3,000 for field research allowances. For more information: http://gsr.ubd.edu.bn/index.php/scholarship
- Brunei Darussalam Government Scholarships to Foreign Students to study for MA and PhD, for more information: http://www.mofat.gov.bn/

General enquiries, applications and entry requirements
Graduate Studies and Research Office: http://gsr.ubd.edu.bn/

Faculty Contact information
The Graduate Programme Leader is the usual first point of contact for anyone interested in pursuing MA or PhD research at the Academy of Brunei Studies. Please address your enquiries to Dr Stephen C Druce, Graduate Programme Leader, Academy of Brunei Studies, Universiti Brunei Darussalam, Tungku Link, Gadong BE 1410 Negara Brunei Darussalam Email: stephen.druce@ubd.edu.bn in Nepal. Outside factors like land reforms, growing caste consciousness and democratisation have endangered the economical and social foundations (especially guthis) on which public rituals, traditional occupations and festivals depend. Inside factors like political oppositions and fragmentation and cultural indifference have led to the disappearance and neglect of much of the traditional heritage. But on the other hand, the opening up of the town, its improved links with Kathmandu (road connection) and the world (telephone and internet connection, foreign anthropologists, donor support, educational facilities) are creating new opportunities that are being increasingly exploited by the inhabitants of Sankhu. Unfortunately, educational and health facilities, and employment have not much improved in Sankhu, which encourages out-migration. Hope to stop this trend is vested in a better road connection with the mountainous hinterland (trade opportunities) and gradual integration of Sankhu in the Kathmandu metropole (public and private investments). Sankhu may have an added value as a future rural ‘green’ suburb of Kathmandu.

Of particular interest and a great help for scholars are the author’s description and explanation of Nepal eras, calendars, (lunar)months, full-moon days, fortnights (bright and dark halves), religiously important days, an inventory of inscriptions, a complete description of all deities and shrines in Sankhu, and the whole Sankhu (multi)annual ritual and festival cycles, a glossary and bibliography. It is also well illustrated with maps and (black and white) photos.

This book is about anthropological facts, structure and system. It is not about feelings and not about stories: the inhabitant’s joint excitement and joys, their quarrels and fights, friendship, enmity and jealousy, sorrow and mourning, servitude and rebelliousness. And yet, such facts also characterize the town as a community. In daily life, they criss-cross localities, transcend caste distinctions, political and economical divisions, and transgress conventions. And thus they transcend and transgress the anthropological structure but not the anthropological reality. Such issues, completing the story of Sankhu, are to be found in the books by the author’s wife Srilaxmi Shrestha, written in Nepal-bhasa. One of these books is translated as A Cry in the Wilderness, published in 2011 in Kathmandu by Vajra Publications.

Sjoerd Zanen is senior trainer/consultant at MDF.
(www.mdf.nl; sz@mdf.nl)